or in Watermark." These regulations should have large steel bolts, the openings being covered with double fine iron wire gauze.

(3) The spirit should be contained in properly constructed steel tanks or drums fitted with covers not hermetically sealed, or in other equally efficient receptacles. Wooden barrels are not considered satisfactory for the carriage of the commodity.

(4) Special precautions should be taken against smoking and the use of lights or fire of any kind while the cargo is being loaded or unloaded, or while the barrels are on fire, or any other appliances connected. It should also be remembered that the risk from the inflammable nature of the cargo does not cease even when it has been discharged, and before any lights are used in the neighbourhood much caution should be observed. It should be taken to ensure that the spirit is clear of the vapour. It is also important to remember that the carriage of empty drums or casks which have contained petroleum spirit requires special efficient precautions and in all cases the cover plugs should be tightly adjusted.

(5) In cargo ships or oil tankers it will be noted that the carriage in each of a limited quantity of petroleum spirit is in small quantities of tubular and in some provided, the receptacles are marked and sealed and are so stored as not to interfere with the carriage of the ship, or under the same circumstances. The containers must not contain more than 2½ gallons and not more than 11 tons may be carried on deck in any ship. This restriction does not apply to oil tankers. Petroleum spirit should be protected from the direct rays of the sun and this can be most effectively accomplished by the use of a narrow awning (see also paragraph (7)).

(6) In passenger ships engaged in short coastal voyages a limited quantity of petroleum spirit may be carried on deck provided proper precautions are taken regarding stowage and keeping the packages away from passengers' premises, or deck space.

(7) In all cases where this class of spirit is carried on deck, conspicuous notices shall be posted up drawing attention to the danger arising from smoking or stirring matches near the deck cargo.

These instructions refer to petroleum which the meaning of the word "petroleum" includes any liquid which is produced by distillation from petroleum shale or coal seam bitumen at a temperature of less than 110° F. as ascertained by the test article in the Petroleum Act, 1928, such as kerosene, Gasoline, Fuel, Naphtha, Benzol, and Lythol, etc.

These regulations also apply to compounds of petroleum which flash at a lower temperature than 110° F. and in various blending of these vapours or solid of petroleum with other substances which flash at less than 110° F.

It is desirable that the same precautions should be applied in the carriage of heavier quantities of oil in cisterns in which the average temperature of the oil may appreciably above the flash-point of the oil.

3. After "Land for dangerous petroleum in the case of the holder of a license in Form II" contained on Form I, the following shall be inserted, namely:—

1.—As for dangerous petroleum in the case of the holder of a license in Form I, the following shall be inserted, namely:—

1. In dangerous petroleum shall be incorporated in country with from any port in the boundary of Malaya, except under the following conditions:—

(a) The petroleum shall be carried either (i) in 44-gallon steel barrels, the inner-cases of such barrels being well-riveted and, also being sealed, or (ii) in a 4-gallon sealed, steel drums, not more than three tiers of such drums being carried on any single vessel, or

(b) in the usual 2-gallon sealed steel tins of petrol receptacles, five tiers of such tins being carried on any single vessel.

(c) All barrels or tins shall be carefully protected, and no leaky barrels or tins shall be taken on board the ship.

(d) The barrels, drums or tins shall not be placed within five feet of the after-deck.

(e) Dangerous petroleum may be carried by deck in the vessel, provided that the hold is properly ventilated, and that the conditions shown following is complied with.

(f) In all vessels a solid bulkhead shall be fitted between the hold and the after-deck when the crew are accommodated, and in vessels fitted with a poop the bulkhead shall be placed immediately in front of the poop. In deck vessels the bulkhead shall reach up to the deck, in all other vessels it shall reach to within six inches of the gunwale.

This bulkhead shall not come within four feet of a point of touch in the hold of the ship.

(g) No fire, naked light of any description, or smoking shall be allowed in any part of the vessel during the carriage of dangerous petroleum, except where the solid bulkhead, above mentioned, and the receptacles light shall be carried with the bulkhead.

(h) The inflammable nature of the dangerous petroleum in other petroleum products shall be noted, but no other cargo shall not include the dangerous material for packing purposes.

(i) Barrels containing spirit shall be placed in convenient places in the cargo, but not more than two barrels to be placed on the after-deck.

Extract from Memorandum relating to the Carriage of Dangerous Goods and Explosives in Ships issued by the Board of Trade, London.

Petroleum spirit (petrol) must not be carried in enclosed ships.

In passenger ships a limited quantity may be carried, in short coastal voyages (see paragraph 10).

Petroleum spirit must not be carried in any quantity in any other ship, but may be carried in small quantities in oil tankers, in which case the spirit must be carried in small quantities in the cargo, and not in the hold.

In order that the transport by sea of this substance may be carried out with maximum safety, it is recommended that in ships, other than those properly constructed for the carriage of bulk cargo, the following precautions should be observed:—

(a) Only iron or steel ships should be used for the carriage of petroleum spirit. The bulkheads dividing the spaces of compartments situated at the stern from any other space should be perfectly gas-tight, and without openings and where there are high doors, these should be sealed efficiently and remain unopened while any petroleum spirit is on board. The whole compartment where it is possible to enter is to be kept closed. The door of the compartment should be as far as possible hermetically sealed. This is especially the case in any way to carry this class of cargo, but where the petroleum spirit is only transported in the small quantities in oil tankers, the bulkheads may be provided, that of which door is in the bottom of the compartment and after half a short distance below the deck. The door, however, should be fitted with "Gaskets" or "Leak-proof" and the "Gaskets" or "Leak-proof" should be tested by the "Watermark" test. These regulations do not apply to ships where the openings being covered with double fine iron wire gauze.

(b) The spirit should be contained in properly constructed steel tanks or drums fitted with covers not hermetically sealed, or in other equally efficient receptacles. Wooden barrels are not considered satisfactory for the carriage of the commodity.

(c) Special precautions should be taken against smoking and the use of lights or fire of any kind while the cargo is being loaded or unloaded, or while the barrels are on fire, or any other appliances connected. It should also be remembered that the risk from the inflammable nature of the cargo does not cease even when it has been discharged, and before any lights are used in the neighbourhood much caution should be observed. It should be taken to ensure that the spirit is clear of the vapour. It is also important to remember that the carriage of empty drums or casks which have contained petroleum spirit requires special efficient precautions and in all cases the cover plugs should be tightly adjusted.

(d) In cargo ships or oil tankers it will be noted that the carriage in each of a limited quantity of petroleum spirit is in small quantities of tubular and in some provided, the receptacles are marked and sealed and are so stored as not to interfere with the carriage of the ship, or under the same circumstances. The containers must not contain more than 2½ gallons and not more than 11 tons may be carried on deck in any ship. This restriction does not apply to oil tankers. Petroleum spirit should be protected from the direct rays of the sun and this can be most effectively accomplished by the use of a narrow awning (see also paragraph 17).

(e) In passenger ships engaged in short coastal voyages a limited quantity of petroleum spirit may be carried on deck provided proper precautions are taken regarding stowage and keeping the packages away from passengers' premises, or deck space.

(f) In all cases where this class of spirit is carried on deck, conspicuous notices shall be posted up drawing attention to the danger arising from smoking or stirring matches near the deck cargo.
